

A. It didn't make a deep impression because I don't remember the first occurrence. We talked, maybe there had been talk before or afterwards. It wasn't vitally important to me, or even important enough to matter.

Q. Now, without identifying anybody, was the person or the people who talked to you about possible membership in the Communist Party, was that person or were those persons, teachers?

A. No, not all of them. It was more social than educational, shall I say. There were - some people were visiting at somebody's house, as I recall. It's somewhat vague. We just got to talking and possibly somebody brought it up. I don't know, I really don't remember.

Q. Now, what was the nature of the group that you joined? Was it a group composed only of teachers?

(Off-the-record consultation between Mrs. Harbatkin and Mr. Ayman)

Q. After consultation with Mr. Ayman, what is your answer please?

A. I was just trying to remember when you asked the question and I don't remember whether or not they were all teachers. I can't even remember that.

Q. Now you then lived on East 7th Street, isn't that correct. You lived on East 7th Street?

A. Yes.

Q. Wasn't this a group of people all of whom resided in that particular area?

A. I don't remember Mr. Moskoff. Just a few people.

Q. Maybe I can refresh your recollection. Beating the gun perhaps, but isn't this a group of which among others, these people were members: [REDACTED] [REDACTED] [REDACTED] [REDACTED]
